What's new? Mytilineos has confirmed today the signing of an agreement for the acquisition of 100% of Imerys Bauxite (see here). The agreement includes all bauxite mining activities in the Fokida area (Greece), which will now form part of Mytilineos' Metals division. In the second stage of the acquisition, Imerys Bauxite will merge with the 100% subsidiary Delphi Distomon. The total transaction costs amounts to €10 million, and Mytilineos is required to supply specified quantities of bauxite to Imerys for 4 years. Moreover, Mytilineos plans to invest an additional ~€100 million for (1) R&D into existing and new deposits, (2) environmental regeneration and (3) equipment renewal, where needed. The exact amount will depend on the specific support provisions of the Critical Raw Materials Act. The transaction is subject to approval from the Hellenic Competition Commission.

Our view: The upfront cash consideration of €10mn is minimal and while the potential €100mn investment over 3-4 years (€25-35mn pa) highlights some catch up requirements, the additional capex is predicated on a supportive CRM policy framework. As we noted last week, the acquisition of Imerys Bauxite offers multiple strategic advantages to Mytilineos. (1) increased backward integration: MYTIL would lift its integration from ~30% (570ktpa bauxite) to ~67% (700ktpa bauxite) production and derisk the majority of the bauxite feed to its 860ktpa alumina plant (2.2 t bauxite per 1 t of alumina). (2) underpinned by Critical Raw Materials Act: the Critical Raw Materials Act highlights the strategic value of bauxite within European borders as it calls for higher self-sufficiency across bauxite, alumina and aluminium. As noted, the company's future investment in the bauxite business hinges on the CRM Act. (3) boost alumina expansion prospects: expanding alumina capacity has been one of MYTIL's growth options in recent years. MYTIL's increased self-sufficiency in bauxite enables an expansion to 1,250ktpa, consolidating the companies international position. (4) strengthen its growth prospects in gallium and rare earths (e.g. scandium).

About Imerys Bauxite: Imerys took ownership of the bauxite mines in Greece as part of its acquisition of S&B in 2014. Imerys Bauxite produces around 700ktpa and is a key bauxite supplier of MYTIL's Aluminum of Greece unit (Metals Segment).
